Royal Seal of Approval for Greenhouse Sensation

Greenhouse Sensation have received the royal seal of approval for their gardening products.

The Greenhouse Sensation team exhibited at The Edible Garden Show on 28th – 30th March and their stand was singled out by Camilla, Duchess of Cornwall for a visit. Camilla said that she wanted to buy a Chilligrow for her son, food writer and restaurant critic Tom Parker-Bowles because he loves chillies but forgets to water them.

Greenhouse Sensation's Chilligrow keeps chillies perfectly fed and watered at all times, without ever sitting the roots in water, so when Tom returns from week long trips reviewing restaurants his chillies won't have gone thirsty. This perfect watering also means Tom will find that he produces bigger harvests than the chillies he has previously grown in growbags and pots.

The Chilligrow has 3 pots and an 8 Litre SmartReservoir. When the soil starts to dry out the Chilligrow's FeederMats pull water up from the SmartReservoir into the soil around the roots – precisely where the plants need it - maintaining perfect moisture levels around the roots at all times.

The Chilligrow's on-demand watering is much more responsive to a plant's needs than hand or dripper watering and the roots are never stood in water so plants are stronger and healthier with no risk of erratic watering causing the common problems of root rot, split fruit and blossom end rot.

The Lancashire-made Chilligrow is a more compact version of the company's best-selling Quadgrow, which was featured on QVC on Saturday and has been nominated for a Grow Your Own 'best space saving product' award.
